

ACCESS LEVEL: LIMITED
FILE: FLIPPEN, ELLY | STATUS: REDACTED

Subject: Elly Flippen
Classification: Speculative Author / Possible Anomaly

NOTES

- Writes speculative science fiction drifting between the ordinary and the impossible.
- Frequently observed side-eyeing technology.
- Known to convince pigeons that park statues are their elected officials.
- Claims control over popcorn consumption (accuracy: <2%).

COMMENTARY

"The best stories are locked doors, daring you to search for the key."

TRIVIA DOSSIER

PHOBIA: Doors that open before you knock.

ORIGIN: Sunrise birth / minor black hole incident (records conflict).

COLLECTION: Drawer of mismatched keys (dimensionally inert).

CATCHPHRASE: "If you hear giggling in the wiring, it's already too late."

FAVORITE SOUND: Refrigerators not powered by Earth electricity.

LOST & FOUND: Sock misplaced in 2007; occasionally emails updates.

SUPERSTITION: Refuses to sit in chairs that look too comfortable.

UNCONFIRMED: May have smuggled a constellation.

HOBBY: Convincing pigeons that park statues are their elected officials.

ACCOMPLISHMENT: Survived three consecutive Mondays without time dilation.

STATUS: Stable enough. Monitor ceiling lights.

SUB-FILE: GREMLIN PROTOCOLS

During her years living with her uncle at 357 Bowery in New York City, she was warned never to cross the Bowery at East Fourth Street, steps away from her uncle's building. Uncle Ingo claimed a gremlin lived on the light pole there, delighting in chaos, flickering the signals just enough to snarl traffic and confuse pedestrians. He added that rumor held the static on nearby radios was actually the gremlin telling jokes.

WEAKNESS: Gremlins glitch when confronted with exact change (coins confuse math).

SUSPICION: Gremlins invented bureaucracy.

FUN FACT: Subject keeps a gremlin jar, always empty... or is it?